How Does It Work?

The PulStar uses a handheld Impulse Head containing Piezoelectric Sensors and is connected to a sophisticated computer program. Each vertebrae or other joint is analyzed for proper function and then displayed as a graph providing both Doctor and Patient with precise information regarding joint functions.

This data, along with other clinical information obtained from the patient history, examination, etc. is used to determine the most effective course of treatment to obtain the best results in the shortest period of time.

In treatment mode, the PulStar delivers a series of precise, computer controlled, gentle impulses to free-up joint fixation, relieve muscle spasm and restore normal joint function.

A post-analysis is performed and compared with the pre-treatment analysis to visualize and verify the results of treatment.
